

ABSTRACT

A method for the non-destructive testing of an element for a nuclear reactor having the steps of :a) acquiring a radiographic digital image of at least one area in element, b) creating a reference image through the digital processing of the image obtained, and c) comparing the image obtained, processed if necessary, with the reference image to detect the presence of defects.